Cost overrun

costs are in excess of budgeted amounts due to a value engineering underestimation of the actual cost during budgeting, they are known by these terms

A cost overrun, also known as a cost increase or budget overrun, involves unexpected incurred costs. When these costs are in excess of budgeted amounts due to a value engineering underestimation of the actual cost during budgeting, they are known by these terms.

Cost overruns are common in infrastructure, building, and technology projects. For IT projects, a 2004 industry study by the Standish Group found an average cost overrun of 43 percent; 71 percent of projects came in over budget, exceeded time estimates, and had estimated too narrow a scope; and total waste was estimated at $55 billion per year in the US alone. Other studies concluded that costs for it projects are overrun by an average of 33 to 34 percent.

Many major construction projects have incurred cost overruns; cost estimates used to decide whether important transportation infrastructure should be built can mislead grossly and systematically.

Cost overrun is distinguished from cost escalation, which is an anticipated growth in a budgeted cost due to factors such as inflation.

These are some notable tornadoes, tornado outbreaks, and tornado outbreak sequences that have occurred around the globe.

Exact death and injury counts are not possible; especially for large events and events before 1955.

Prior to 1950 in the United States, only significant tornadoes are listed for the number of tornadoes in outbreaks.

Due to increasing detection, particularly in the U.S., numbers of counted tornadoes have increased markedly in recent decades although the number of actual tornadoes and counted significant tornadoes has not. In older events, the number of tornadoes officially counted is likely underestimated.
